Early 19th Century

A small building standing on this farm and now used for a shed was an original dwelling for the property. It is a single cell structure with leanto additions on both gable ends. Original beaded shiplap siding remains on the east facade. A stair boxed into the corner with beaded boards leads to the single chamber above.

Also on the property is an old corn crib also dating from the early 19th Century.

DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

North Wales is located along the Choptank River on a dirt lane running west from Frazier's Neck Road, approximately one and one-tenth mile south of Maryland Route 331, northwest of Preston, Caroline County. The structure is a house that has been converted into a farm shed and is in very poor condition.

The house is one and one-half storys of frame construction on brick pilings. The main section has a single room plan with a corner stair case and a fireplace on the opposite gable wall. The east and west facades are three bays with a central entrance and two windows. The east facade has shiplap siding while the other facades are clapboard. Both gable ends have one story shed additions, although the south one seems to have been built originally to the south wall of the main section. The east and west facades have long porch roofs that functioned to protect equipment when the structure was converted to a farm shed. The west roof has a gable dormer with a 6/6 sash window. The construction materials and technique indicate that this house was built in the mid-nineteenth century, although it appears to be earlier, stylistically.

The property also has a small corn crib in remarkably good condition. Its framing is hewn and pegged with both ends having double doors on the first story and one door to the loft. The joists overhang the sides of the crib by at least a foot. Cut nails were used to apply the oak slats to the framing. One door on the south side has unusual shaped hinges.
